Recent Research Grants

2016, Monash University Faculty of Arts and Faculty of Engineering Interdisciplinary Research Seed Funding Scheme, “Ethical Issues in Commercialisation of Stem Cell Therapies.” M Selgelid and L Meagher. Role: Co-Chief Investigator. Funding $20,000.

Project Summary: Although stem cell research has been a central topic of bioethical debate during the 21st century, the majority of attention has focused on the moral status of embryos. Though commercialisation of stem cell technologies raises numerous distinct ethical issues, these have received far less attention and/or remain largely unresolved. This project will thus identify and review (the state of debate regarding) the primary ethical issues associated with the commercialisation of stem cell science and technology—ultimately resulting in (1) publication of a relevant review article (inter alia highlighting issues in need of additional/future research) and (2) development of (an) externally funded research project(s) on the most important unresolved issues in need of additional/future.

2015, US National Institutes of Health (NIH) Research Contract, Gain of Function Research Ethical Analysis White Paper.

Project Summary: In 2014 the administration of US President Barack Obama called for a “pause” on funding (and relevant research with existing US Government funding) of GOF experiments involving influenza, SARS, and MERS viruses in particular. With announcement of this pause, the US Government launched a “deliberative process” regarding risks and benefits of GOF to inform future funding decisions—and the US National Science Advisory Board for Biosecurity (NSABB) was tasked with making recommendations to the US Government on this matter. As part of this deliberative process the National Institutes of Health (NIH) commissioned this Ethical Analysis White Paper, requesting that it provide (1) review and summary of ethical literature on GOF, (2) identification and analysis of existing ethical and decision-making frameworks relevant to (i) the evaluation of risks and benefits of GOF, (ii) decision-making about the conduct of GOF studies, and (iii) the development of US policy regarding GOF (especially with respect to funding of GOF), and (3) development of an ethical and decision-making framework that may be considered by NSABB when analyzing information provided by GOF risk-benefit assessment, and when crafting its final recommendations (especially regarding policy decisions about funding of GOF in particular).

2014-2015, Monash-Warwick Alliance Seed Fund Scheme, “Ethics of Public Health Security.” With Professor Tom Sorell (Warwick) as co-principle-investigator; and with Justin Oakley (Monash) and John Guelke (Warwick) as co-applicants. Funding AU$22,500 + £8,821

Project Summary: Collaborative research, network building, and fund-raising in security ethics and public health ethics—e.g., pandemics, vaccination programs, public health surveillance, bioterrorism, emergency response.

2012-2016, NHMRC Centre of Research Excellence (CRE), ‘Tuberculosis Control: From Discovery to Public Health Practice and Policy.’ Warwick Britton et al. Role: Associate Investigator. Funding $2,498,845

Project Summary: Control and, ultimately, the elimination of one of the world’s major infectious diseases, TB, is a key goal of the WHO and is captured in the United Nations’ Millennium Development Goals (Goal 6). This multidisciplinary CRE in TB control will strengthen and extend existing national, regional and international networks and provide a major resource for training, strategic research and translation into policy. There will be a specific focus on the neglected area of TB in children and the emerging problem of drug resistant TB.

2009-2013, The Wellcome Trust, Enhancement Award in Biomedical Ethics, ‘Building a Sustainable Capacity in Dual-Use Bioethics.’ M Dando, S Whitby, J Whitman, B Rappert, A Kelle, J Sture, M Selgelid. Role: Co-applicant. Funding £349,742 (£29,000 for ANU)

Project Summary: Professor Malcolm Dando and colleagues (Dr. Jim Whitman, Dr. Simon Whitby & Dr. Judi Sture) at the University of Bradford’s Department of Peace Studies, together with Dr Brian Rappert in the Department of Sociology and Philosophy, University of Exeter, Dr Alexander Kelle in the Department of European Studies, University of Bath, and Michael Selgelid, Australian National University (ANU) Canberra, are collaborating on research into the use of the products of biological research in warfare and bioterrorism. Their aim is to enable more bioethical research into so-called 'dual-use' of the life sciences, and help develop policies and practices that will prevent the misuse of knowledge generated through biomedical research. It is an emerging research area, and the Enhancement Award will help provide career opportunities for young researchers, including doctoral students who will begin their studies in autumn 2009, increase long-term capacity, engage practising life scientists with these issues, and provide a basis for developing effective policies in the future.

2009-2011, Australian Research Council, Discovery Project, 'Infectious Diseases, Security and Ethics.' C Enemark and M Selgelid. Role: Chief Investigator. Funding $260,000.

Project Summary: The emergence and spread of deadly infectious diseases increasingly pose health, economic, security, and ethical challenges for Australia and the world. This project investigates links between infectious diseases, national security and human ethics. The project aims: (1) To identify and analyse national security and ethical issues associated with government responses to five infectious disease challenges (pandemic influenza, SARS, plague, TB and HIV/AIDS); (2) To develop ethically acceptable policy recommendations for control of diseases with security implications. Expected outcomes include multidisciplinary workshops, an edited book and a co-authored book. This project will benefit Australia directly by: Promoting greater understanding within the community of the national security and ethical implications of infectious disease threats; Recommending policies for responding in ways that achieve better public health, national security and human rights outcomes for Australians; Addressing the National Research Priority of Promoting and Maintaining Good Health by contributing to the Priority Goal of strengthening Australia's social and economic fabric; Training a future Australian expert via the PhD process, providing him or her with specific knowledge and generic academic skills; Creating national and international linkages between academics and non-academic professionals.
